ABOUT CIDSE 26
In 2018, the president of CIDSE was my predecessor Eamonn Meehan who led our organisation for an exciting year full of activities but marked specially by COP24 in Katowice, Poland.

It was a big moment for our sustainable lifestyles campaign “Change for The Planet – Care for the People” as a unique time and place in which to unite our volunteers.

Many of them spoke later of their time in Katowice as a turning point for them – how it was the first time they attended a political demonstration for climate, or they heard a moving story that opened them to a new perspective on the issue.

The volunteers also attended our public premiere of our new documentary “Energy to Change”, which connects the dots on personal engagement with integral ecology and the systemic changes we need to see in our energy systems.

Last spring, we also organised our first Systemic Change Forum in Leuven (Belgium). This merging of minds and hearts kicked off a fresh exploration of our core objective of global justice: to envision a new world with a system that addresses interlinked crises with holistic solutions to answer the cries of the earth and the poor.

All our priorities ran at full speed ahead: we launched a multimedia project on agroecology, carried out a directors’ visit to Israel and the occupied Palestinian territory. We continued to develop our approach to gender equality, and to put forward innovative proposals for addressing energy poverty and climate mitigation and resilience.

With our strong presence and engagement at the World Social Forum and the Thematic Social Forum on mining and extractives, we continued to explore with social movements how we can best support and amplify their inspiring work.

Our advocacy work in the field of business and human rights continued to rely on direct lobbying, but also to explore the use of storytelling through the testimonials of people affected by transnational corporations who seek justice in a context of corporate impunity.

We hope you will enjoy the new format of this annual report and invite you to read about our activities, achievements and ambitions!

Looking forward to working with you in 2019.

Lieve Herijgers
Director, Broederlijk Delen (Belgium)

AREAS OF WORK
At CIDSE, we strive for a holistic transformation that pervades all parts of society. This involves looking at current injustices and inequalities; ecological dysfunction; and climate change with a unified approach. It also implies adopting a self-critical lens about the way we live and run our organisations. Our Systemic Change Forum gathered the network to discuss together our vision of systemic change.

EVENTS

On April 17 and 18, over 90 representatives of CIDSE members, allies and partners gathered at the Irish College in Leuven (Belgium) for the first CIDSE Systemic Change Forum. The theme was ‘Rethinking our relationship with nature.’

CIDSE and its members also took part in the World Social Forum in Salvador de Bahia, Brazil. There, we organised several side events, including one focussing on new paradigms to avoid the ecological crisis based on buenvivir.

RESOURCES

We made significant strides in defining our systemic change work and perspectives with resources. We established in December 2017 our Voices for change blog where we share the reflections of our network on current issues that are challenging and transforming systems.

We wrote a report to summarise the outcomes from our Systemic Change Forum, which is fundamental for building a common CIDSE understanding of our vision of systemic change and how to achieve it. This report was enlivened by a series of illustrations interpreting these lessons on systemic change.

We also created an infographic of systemic solutions to lower carbon emissions to stay within 1.5°C average temperature increase above pre-industrial levels, as outlined in our report ‘The Climate Urgency’.

STORIES

Watch the interviews filmed at the Systemic Change Forum: ‘Acting to transform our relationship with nature’ or read the blog on what our lifestyles can mean for systemic change.
We prioritise gender equality as a transversal priority, finding its implications within all our areas of work and making sure that women’s perspectives are heard and promoted.

EVENTS
We conducted trainings on gender equality in Africa and Europe.

Thanks to some newly developed methodologies, CIDSE carried out trainings on gender equality with different groups, including members of the SECAM (Symposium of Episcopal Conferences of Africa and Madagascar) secretariat and the Ghana Bishops’ Conference, MIJARC, the international Catholic movement of rural youth and staff from our member organisation in Austria as well as from the Secretariat. These trainings opened up significant discussions on what gender equality means in the context of power struggle and social and ecological justice from a faith-based perspective.

RESOURCES
The 'Believe in Change gender toolkit' was developed to support the Church in promoting gender justice.

It is a gender resource for organisational staff from church organisations, particularly Catholic church organisations and those who intend to work with these church organisations.

The toolkit is intended as an inspirational guide to support them in their work towards achieving gender justice. It intends to raise awareness of the importance of gender equality, address concerns and common misconceptions and increase staff gender competency and programme quality.

The toolkit was developed by Tanja Haque, CAFOD’s gender advisor from 2009-2018.

STORIES
The gender equality blog is written by CIDSE partners and allies, to find how gender intersects with climate justice, extractivism and more.
The wisdom contained in the ground-breaking encyclical Laudato Si’ by Pope Francis in 2015 constitutes our main guiding framework and source of inspiration in the fields of climate justice, corporate regulation and more. We are committed to spreading its message through our work.

EVENTS
CIDSE played a key role in the organisation of the conference ‘Saving our common home and the future of life on earth’, on the occasion of the third anniversary of the publication of the Encyclical Laudato Si’ (Rome, 5-6 July 2018).

Alongside the COP24 conference and as part of the volunteers’ programme for the campaign ‘Change for the Planet - Care for the People’, CIDSE organised the event ‘Towards an ecological conversion for the people and the planet’ with the Archdiocese of Katowice, Caritas Internationalis, Caritas Poland, the Global Catholic Climate Movement and Franciscans International.

RESOURCES

Laudato Si’ is present across our work, provoking specific reflections in our resources.

The paper, ‘’Joint reflection on land in Africa’’ published with the support of CIDSE, explores the theological foundation of our responsibility to care for the land and small-scale food producers.

Our Secretary General, Josianne Gauthier, wrote an opinion piece ‘’Laudato Si’ and the urgency of the present moment’’ after the conference ‘Saving our home and the future of life on earth’.

STORIES

In our Voices for Change blog, we featured the piece: What’s the place of transition in the Christian message?
CIDSE’s work in the field of business and human rights aims to end corporate negligence in the form of human rights violations and environmental degradation. CIDSE advocates for a UN Binding Treaty to regulate transnational corporations’ activities. CIDSE works together with partners struggling against extractive industries to support their demands of corporate accountability and justice especially at UN and EU levels.

EVENTS
CIDSE and COMECE, the Commission of the Bishops’ Conferences of the European Union, hosted a high-level delegation of the Pan-Amazonian Ecclesial Network (REPAM) and organised visits with prominent representatives of the European institutions as well as a lunch debate and a press conference.

CIDSE attended the fourth session of the open-ended intergovernmental working group (IGWG) on transnational corporations and other business enterprises with respect to human rights. Several activities were organised with allies.

CIDSE was also part of a panel debate at the ‘Forum des Libertés’ in Brussels about the responsibilities of transnational corporations.

RESOURCES
CIDSE’s submission to the 4th session of the IGWG on transnational corporations and other business enterprises with respect to human rights.

We also produced an infographic on the current barriers to justice for communities impacted by the activities of transnational corporations.

STORIES
We gathered testimonies from our partners on the impacts of transnational corporations and the need to protect human rights and the environment.
The extractive sector and particularly mining have a destructive impact on the social fabric and the environment of many communities. The growing demand for materials from our high-consumption economy exacerbates this trend. CIDSE joins many grassroots groups in advocating for a different system of production and consumption; one that prioritises access for all to basic goods and services without overexploiting the earth.

EVENTS
As member of the International Coordination Committee, CIDSE supported the organisation and actively participated in the first Thematic Social Forum on mining and the extractivist economy which gathered representatives from 60 countries in Johannesburg (12-15 November).

The Meeting of Communities Impacted by Mining in Latin America held in Brasilia (7-10 August) was an opportunity to deepen the solidarity of the Church with the victims and communities impacted by mining from different countries of the region. This meeting was co-organised by the National Conference of Bishops of Brazil (CNBB), the Iglesias y Minería network, CIDSE, and the Department of Justice and Solidarity (DEJUSOL) of CELAM.

RESOURCES
Several important resources were published urging for an ecological conversion and alternatives to extractives.

CIDSE supported the dissemination of the Pastoral letter on Integral Ecology by CELAM, the Continental Latin American Bishops’ Conference, calling for care for creation in response to the damaging consequences of the over-exploitation of the earth’s natural resources.

We facilitated the drafting of the final declaration of the Thematic Social Forum: ‘Beyond Extractivism: Reclaiming Peoples Power, our Right to Say No’.

The Meeting of Communities Impacted by Mining in Latin America concluded with the release of a ‘Public letter to our churches, organisations and society’ calling for an end to unbridled extractivism and the promotion of new production models that guarantee the lives of future generations and respect mother earth.

STORIES
‘Churches and communities affected by mining must build alternatives to defend life and the earth’, blog article by Moema de Miranda.
All over the world the phenomenon of land grabbing and land expropriation is disrupting communities, threatening their ability to cultivate crops and thus their access to food, and interrupting their traditional agricultural methods. CIDSE’s work on land looks at resistance to land grabbing and systems of community land management.

EVENTS
CIDSE supported a Caravan in West Africa against extractivism, land grabbing, and resource depletion, demanding the preservation of resources of Africa for future generations.

RESOURCES
CIDSE supported the publication ‘Joint reflection on land in Africa’, an exploration on Laudato Si’s approach to our relationship and responsibility to care for the land and its small-scale food producers’ by Africa-Europe Faith and Justice Network (AEFJN); Africa Faith and Justice Network (AFJN); the Alliance for Food Sovereignty in Africa (AFSA); the Symposium of Episcopal Conferences of Africa and Madagascar (SECAM); and the Regional Episcopal Conference of West Africa (RECOWA).

STORIES
Interview with Mirtha Vásquez, a lawyer from Grufides in Peru who works to defend people who experienced land expropriations by mining companies.
The CIDSE working group on Israel & the occupied Palestinian territory (oPt), together with partners in the region, aims at promoting the achievement of a comprehensive, just and lasting peace, based on international law, including relevant UN resolutions, leading to self-determination for both Israelis and Palestinians.

EVENTS
In April, directors and representatives of seven CIDSE member organisations travelled to the region to meet Palestinian and Israeli partners and the communities they serve.

RESOURCES
CIDSE and EuroMed Rights sent a joint letter to Federica Mogherini, High Representative of the European Union for Foreign Affairs and Security Policy to draw the EU’s attention about the imminent demolition of the Bedouin village of Umm al-Hiran in Israel.

STORIES
We published two articles by Gerry Lee (Maryknoll Office for Global Concerns) and Maria Gonzalez (CAFOD) who joined the CIDSE April delegation to Israel and the oPt.
Food security is essential for any community, yet it is affected by a complex series of variables, including agricultural production methods, rural development, ecological sustainability and privatisation. We are working to combine the collective knowledge from our partners and members on the ground to design food systems that can help communities take control of their food supply.

EVENTS
We launched our publication 'The Principles of Agroecology' at a side event in Rome during the 2nd FAO International Symposium on Agroecology.

RESOURCES
CIDSE produced 'The Principles of Agroecology', and supported other major reports on food systems by several alliances of which we are members:
▷ The Principles of Agroecology report addresses current gaps in the definition of agroecology, to provide a set of fundamental principles for the network from which to build joint work on agroecology from a mutual understanding.
▷ CLARA ‘Missing pathways to 1.5°C’
▷ Global Network for the Right to Food and Nutrition - Watch report "When Food Becomes Immateria- Confronting the Digital Age”.

CIDSE also participated in the FAO e-consultation and sent comments on the V0 draft of the high-level panel of experts’ report on agroecological approaches and other innovations for sustainable agriculture and food systems that enhance food security and nutrition.

Infographics:
▷ The Principle of Agroecology
▷ Agroecology for climate and social justice

STORIES
The Principles of Agroecology was unique for its multimedia format that included an interactive online publication in seven languages.

We conducted a series of interviews with academics and activists on agroecology and how it intersects with other issues.

We continued to explore agroecology from a systemic change and gender perspective and published a blog article by Emma Siliprandi.
With each year that passes since the Paris Agreement was adopted at COP21, the carbon budget decreases, and our engagement with the process increases. But no matter what happens inside the negotiations, we take the opportunity of the COP to unite civil society to push for a just energy transition, with or without the support of member states.

EVENTS
At a side event on 6 December, we deconstructed some of the false solutions to the climate crisis, such as geoengineering and negative emissions technologies, and leading academics showed that there is more evidence that alternative forms of land management can play a significant role in carbon emissions reduction.

We organised a panel at the virtual Climate Vulnerable Forum where grassroots initiatives were discussed that provide holistic solutions to climate and development issues, highlighting the role of youth and faith-based communities in organising.

RESOURCES
Our report, ‘The Climate Urgency’, describes just pathways to provide for food and energy demand while staying within 1.5°C warming above pre-industrial average temperatures. It combines agroecology, renewable energy systems and sustainable lifestyles and touches on frameworks for policy such as post-growth and sufficiency. The shortcomings of geoengineering and negative emissions technologies are also pointed out. Three infographics were produced from this report.

CIDSE directors issued a joint statement calling for a systemic approach to climate change, in response to the release of the IPCC special report.

We supported the drafting and dissemination of a powerful appeal signed by continental bishops’ conferences calling for government leaders to take ambitious and immediate action to tackle and overcome the devastating effects of the climate crisis.

Earlier in the year, CIDSE also submitted a contribution to the Talanoa Dialogue based on Catholic Social Teaching and with the experience from our partners working with communities on the front lines of climate change impacts.

CIDSE is part of an alliance of civil society organisations that advocate for equity to be included in the implementation of the Paris Agreement. We supported the dissemination of the latest report ‘After Paris: Inequality, Fair Shares, and the Climate Emergency’.

STORIES
Volunteers from CIDSE member organisations who travelled to Poland for the COP24 conference shared their experiences in a series of blog articles.
We have continued to gather evidence that responding to the need of vulnerable populations for energy access is not in conflict with the need to rapidly decarbonise our energy systems. The human need for energy security, and the human need for healthy ecosystems are real, and there are alternatives to megaprojects and fossil fuels, alternative that are being tested by communities, giving them the autonomy to design the energy systems that work for them.

EVENTS

Recognising the multidisciplinary nature of our work on energy, we organised events at the intersection of energy with finance and extractives.

We organised a roundtable event at the European Parliament on the current reality and future of EU climate finance.

At the World Social Forum in Brazil, we held a side event to discuss social problems related to hydropower megaprojects. Participants exchanged their experiences of resistance and established potential joint strategies to promote alternatives.

RESOURCES

We commissioned research into EU financing of energy projects in the development context. Our research paper ‘EU support for energy in developing countries, 2010-2016’ looks into how the EU’s current finance of energy projects in developing countries currently holds up to these commitments, in terms of providing renewable energy to populations lacking access to energy.

In The Climate Urgency paper, we continued to define our position on the role renewable energy systems can play in climate.

STORIES

We continued to highlight the voices and experiences of our partners on the injustices of current energy systems.

From Colombia to South Africa, we raised the voices of partners on the extractivist nature of energy megaprojects in an article and two video interviews.

These testimonies confirm that the energy from such megaprojects can have negative impacts for local communities, and add insult to injury by failing to provide them with access to energy.

In an article on our gender blog, by the National Steering Committee of the South Africa Women Building Power Campaign and WoMin, we heard how these impacts fall on women in particular.
It is hard to compare the power of face-to-face exchanges in changing our own mentalities. The young activists we gather in camps across Europe talk afterwards of these gatherings as a life changing moment. Together, they offer each other support and knowledge about how to live their values in the way they produce and consume, and how they can push decision-makers to make their lifestyle choices the norm.

EVENTS
The workshops in our sustainability camps offered reflections on the personal meaning of Laudato Si’, and our own individual commitments to justice in our daily lives.

In Belgium, Broederlijk Delen welcomed volunteers from our members in the UK, Portugal, Germany and Slovakia as well as from partners from New Zealand and Poland. It was inspiring for volunteers to see that they are part of a global movement for change.

Following the example of the 2017 camps in Portugal and Belgium, volunteers from Manos Unidas organised their first sustainable camp in Spain.

In December, we brought volunteers together in Poland outside of the COP24 conference. Apart from regular workshops exchanging on initiatives for sustainable lifestyles and climate justice, they participated in the climate march and a programme with high-level church leaders.

RESOURCES
We organised a webinar between journalists and communicators to discuss how to spread the word on sustainable lifestyles practices. We compiled these lessons into a toolkit for journalists to be released in 2019.

As an outcome of their sustainable camp, the volunteers of Manos Unidas produced a decalogue on how to live sustainably.

We are developing tools and graphics to keep our volunteers motivated to live sustainably and created a series of funny GIFs about energy consumption.

STORIES
We offered our volunteers their own blog space, where they could share their thoughts from our sustainable camps, and their personal journeys of ecological conversion. During the camp in Belgium we filmed interviews with our volunteers on what ‘being the change’ and climate activism means to them.

Our second documentary, Energy to Change was screened for the first time outside of COP24 during our volunteer camp in Katowice with wonderful reactions from our partners and volunteers.

We are an international family of Catholic social justice organisations working for transformational change to end poverty and inequalities, challenging systemic injustice, inequity, destruction of nature and promoting just and environmentally sustainable alternatives.

We work for reform with transformative potential: to move away from fossil fuels and extractivism, to limit global temperature rise below 1.5 degrees, to promote the right to food and agroecology, to regulate business to enforce human rights, to secure sustainable finance and fair wealth distribution, to support local communities to speak for themselves, to confront gender inequalities, and to enable sustainable ways of living.

To make this happen we contribute to global movements and alliances of change, promote peoples’ solutions and alternatives and advocate at the international level.

SECRETARIAT STAFF (August 2019)

The CIDSE Secretariat facilitates and coordinates the common efforts of its members, represents CIDSE at the EU and international levels and undertakes advocacy activities and other initiatives in collaboration with its members to contribute towards systemic change and global justice.

The Secretariat is organised into teams that coordinate various working groups in order to achieve its objectives:

1. Societal and ecological transformation
2. Communities regaining control over the commons
3. Facing climate change: just and sustainable food and energy models
4. Change starts with us
During 2018, CIDSE paid farewell to Eamonn Meehan, former Director of Trócaire (Ireland) and former CIDSE President, as well as to Heidi Höok and Agnieszka Burda. CIDSE thanks them for their valuable contributions to our work.
